

Safe Quality Food (SQF) Certification

UL Registrar's Safe Quality Food Audits help various segments of the food supply chain maintain a robust food safety management system and minimize product safety related risks, which ultimately aid in reducing product recalls, promoting consumer safety, and building consumer confidence.

UL Registrar is licensed by Safe Quality Food Institute (SQFI) to verify and certify companies that comply with the documented requirements of the SQF Code. SQF is a vertically integrated and globally-recognized GFSI Code intended to promote food safety and quality management system conformance for the different sectors of the food chain, from food production on farms to distribution and storage of food products through processing/manufacturing worldwide.

Safe Quality Food Audits help an organization minimize risk, which encourages consumer trust in an organization's food brand. UL Registrar's SQF Audits are conducted by highly competent auditors who have years of experience in the relevant industry sectors. Through UL SQF Certification, UL Registrar helps enhance a buyer's confidence in a sourced product, as well as a consumer's positive perception of an organization's food brand.

UL Registrar is committed to providing a 'value-added' audit based on a century of UL's commitment and expertise in product safety science. As consumers are becoming increasingly aware of the safety of the food they eat, UL's expertise in the area of product safety will not only help the food industry to achieve their business objectives of food safety, but will also help promote a culture of continual improvement in the organization.

An organization that successfully completes UL Registrar's SQF Audit will receive a UL Certificate of Conformance and the UL Enhanced Certification Mark, which is one of the most-widely recognized symbols of safety in the world.

UL is a pioneer in safety science and offers a wide range of certification options for the food industry, from farms to food distribution centers. Along with the Safe Quality Food (SQF) Certification, UL Registrar also offers a Good Manufacturing Practices (GMP) Certification to the food scheme, the FDA's 21 CFR Part 110.
