LEED and UL

UL solutions contribute to LEED credit categories

LEED (Leadership in Energy and Environmental Design) is a building program that addresses sustainability issues in the way buildings and communities are planned, constructed, maintained and operated. UL Environment offers a number of certifications and validations that allow products from a variety of industries to contribute to a building's pursuit of LEED Certification, and its overall LEED score. There are two credit categories for which UL Environment certifications and validations can apply: Materials & Resources and Environmental Quality.

- LEED continues to evolve to address the needs of international projects and create meaningful solutions on a global scale.
- More than 1.85 million square feet of development is becoming LEED Certified daily.
- UL offerings that enable products to contribute to LEED Certification include:
 - GREENGUARD Certification
 - ECOLOGO Certification
 - Environmental Product Declaration Certification
 - Environmental Claim Validation
 - Product Lens Program Report
