Inspire confidence in your technology

Gain consumer trust and keep it

Whatever your industry, you know that trust is a fragile thing. Consumers must believe in your brand, your product, its performance and its safety.

To build trust, you need assistance with product, safety and performance testing. To gain and keep that trust, that assistance must come from someone with unquestioned knowledge of cutting-edge technologies and broad experience in the global regulatory environment.

UL offers safety, electromagnetic compatibility, wireless and performance testing and certification services for various industries including automotive and mobility, batteries, consumer electronics, internet of Things (IoT), mobile and telecommunications, information and communication technology, and medical devices.

Accelerate speed to market

The ever-changing world of market compliance is complicated as regulations and requirements rapidly change and differ from country to country. These changes can frustrate product development and delay market access, particularly for consumer technology products.

UL cuts through the complexity of global market access and charts a course that gets your product to market faster. We bundle our services so a single submission and a single point of contact can give you access to all your target markets at once.
